Deb -

From item below - FYI – A top BLM official at the news conference, however, agreed that his agency and the Forest Service have made “a lot of progress” toward meeting the bureau’s concerns, expressed in formal comments on an earlier version of the environmental impact statement and in an Oct. 29 letter to the service.

The bureau had originally threatened to write a dissenting view to accompany the final environmental impact statement. But it later acknowledged that the Forest Service review process doesn’t allow that.

“I think right now we are in a pretty good position with the Forest Service,” said Tim Shannon, manager of BLM’s Gila District office in Tucson. “The resource specialists at BLM are pretty happy with how the mitigation and monitoring discussions are going. They have addressed quite a few of our earlier concerns.”
